Source pack: evening film club

The following sources and people are fictional. Read both complete texts. Each task has three lines: the requested short response on lines 1–2; source codes and one brief reason on line 3. Maximum 35 words per task, including the reason. Preserve disagreement; do not decide that a proposal has already happened.

Example only. M1: a walking group proposes a shorter route if a second guide joins. M2: a member supports the idea but no second guide is confirmed. Summary: The group proposes a shorter route, and one member supports it, but a second guide is still needed. Check: M1/M2 preserve support and an unmet condition.

Attribute: According to... / The organiser proposes... / The contributor argues... . Contrast: although / however / whereas. Conditional plan: would / if / subject to... . Missing evidence does not prove the opposite.

A Organiser's planning note

A1

Our film club has used a hall with thirty seats for three Thursday screenings. A volunteer recorded twenty-two attendees at the latest screening. That attendance figure describes one event; it does not measure everyone who might join. We want to reach people who cannot travel on Thursday evenings, but we have not counted how many people face that difficulty.

I propose offering the next discussion in two forms: a meeting in the hall and an online discussion later in the week. This would give some people another way to contribute. However, the second discussion depends on a volunteer moderator and suitable internet access. Neither has been confirmed, so the existing hall meeting remains the only agreed arrangement.

I would like to review both attendance and participants' experiences before deciding whether to repeat the two-form arrangement. More contributions would be encouraging, but a larger count alone would not tell us whether people felt able to take part. The proposal should therefore be tested, rather than advertised as a proven solution.

I welcome another way to join discussions, although an online option would not solve every access problem. Some people work evening shifts, while others lack a reliable connection. Changing the channel could help one group and leave another with the same difficulty. I have spoken with two friends about this; I have not surveyed the club, so I cannot say which problem is most common.

Instead of treating the proposed online discussion as enough, I suggest publishing a short summary of the film debate and allowing written comments for a few days. That could suit people who cannot attend at the set time. Someone would still need to prepare the summary and collect the comments. I do not know whether a volunteer could take on that extra work.

I am not asking the club to cancel the hall meeting. I value speaking face to face and would keep that option. My concern is that calling any single arrangement inclusive may hide people it still leaves out. The organiser's proposed review seems useful, provided it asks about barriers as well as counting contributions.
